FOR THE FAIR SEX.

A Second Wedding Ring.

Samuel Bishop (died 1795), wrote some poems, the best of which is in praise of his wife, on the anniversary of her wedding-day, which was also her birthday, with a ring:

"Thee, Mary, with this ring I wed,"
So fourteen years ago I said.
Behold another ring! For what?
To wed thee o'er again! Why not?
With that first ring I married youth,
Grace, beauty, innocence and truth;
Taste long admired, sense long revered,
And all my Molly then appeared.
If she, by merit, since disclosed,
Prove twice the woman I supposed,
I plead that double merit now
To justify a double vow;
Here, then, to-day (with faith as sure,
With ardor as intense, as pure,
As when amid the rites divine,
I took thy troth and plighted mine)
To thee, sweet girl, my second ring
A token and a pledge I bring;
With this ring I wed, till death us part,
Thy riper virtues to my heart;
Those virtues, which, before untried,
The wife has added to the bride;
Those virtues whose progressive claim,
Endearing wedlock's very name,
My soul enjoys, my song approves,
For conscience's sake as well as love's.
And why? They show me every hour
Honor's high thought, affection's power,
Discretion's deed, sound judgment's sentence,
And teach me all things—but repentance.

Fashion Matters.

Satin dresses are trimmed with ribbons having chintz borders, in such a way as to look as if made of handkerchiefs.

Collars, cuffs and muffs of leopard skins are worn by young ladies with plain walking costumes of solid colored camel's hair or corduroy.

Woven petticoats that now come for little girls as well as women, in attractive patterns and bright colors, are fast taking the place of flannel. They are not so liable to shrink in washing, and while light in weight they cling to the figure and make a very warm garment.

Feathers are more than ever in demand. Both dyers and curlers diversify plumes to the utmost; some of the last novelties are shaded in blue on one side of the stem, and in red, yellow or some strangely contrasting hue on the other. Occasionally the upper filaments lie in a curly bunch, leaving the lower ones spread plain.

There is quite a rage at present in Paris as in America for rich buttons; Parisian elegantes are wearing buttons made of enamels of old silver, of paste diamonds—in fact of everything worn a hundred years ago, and possibly included in their great-grandmothers' corbeille de noce; for the more antique these buttons are, the more highly they are prized.

Hosiery of spun silk is embroidered in Persian patterns or, if preferred, can be bought in plain colors to match the costume. Slippers have the Pompadour heel and are finished with one strap across the instep, or a succession of straps between the toe and the ankle are each ornamented with a fine cut steel buckle set in a satin bow.

Flowers and feathers enter so largely into the composition of evening bonnets that both materials are frequently seen on the one head-dress, or the entire bonnet may be composed exclusively of the one material—if of flowers, violets, tea roses, forget-me-nots and heliotrope, each in separate clusters, may be used; if of feathers, silver heron plumes may be mixed with graceful ostrich tips and a Spanish lace scarf may complete the bonnet.

Fans are composed of dove-tinted feathers with one or more rows of peacock "eyes" just peeping out from the somber tint, or the whole fan may be strewn with the minute feathers plucked from the peacock's head, the brilliancy of the colors appearing like tiny gems; the sticks are of ivory, either plain or carved; the center of the fan is three inches deeper than the sides, and in some a tiny jewel, either a Rhine pebble or any inexpensive stone, is set in the rivet. Persian working in gold and silver thread is one of the newest features in fans, and the delicacy of the work is equal to hand painting, representing either elaborate or plain designs.

The newest wraps are made in dolman shape of the Veloure imperatrice, a material that shows a heavy silk rib on the outside and a fleecy wool surface within. This is made either without additional lining or a silk quilted or fur lining is used; the front of the garment buttons from the throat to the bottom and is carried close under the arms to the back and secured at the waist with a strap and buckle or with buttons; the back part forms a perfect circle that is fitted close over the shoulders and covers the arms yet does not meet in front. The same style of garment is made also in seal or cloth and trimmed with broad bands of fur that are either placed outside or carried up on the inside to impart warmth and form a projecting border.

Gloves with kid lace tops are among the favorite novelties, and may be had in all delicate shades that prevail in fine dress fabrics. The lace is made either to match the shade of the glove or in marked yet delicate contrast to it. Although all shades are in vogue, black is still the most fashionable, not only for visiting and promenade, but for full dress. An imported dress glove has one, two or three rows of real lace one inch wide, hand-sewed between strips of the kid of the same width. Seven buttons is the usual length, but the lace adds considerably to this and brings the top nearly to the elbow, and gives these the title of the Pompadour glove. For the promenade and shopping very fine kid is fleece-lined and finished with fur. These are preferred by many ladies to the old style dogskin glove, as they are not so clumsy on the hand.

Should Cousins Kiss?

Number three of a series of prize questions promulgated by the London Whitehall Review, is "Should adult cousins, male and female, be allowed to kiss each other?" Some of the answers received are as follows:

YES, BECAUSE

Jacob, after having personated Esau, kissed his cousin Rachel as soon as he saw her, and their parents approved.

Then they will care for it as little as does grocers' boys do for sugar.

Shakespeare says, "Kiss me, sweet c z;" and Tennyson says of himself and his "Cousin Amy:" "And our spirits rushed together at the touching of the lips."

As a lady is concerned it must be considered a fair proceeding. If she is married it cannot be amiss.

Brothers and sisters kiss, and their children should follow their example.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," a kiss being a touch of nature they should kiss to make them still more akin.

Family affection is a tender and beautiful plant which cannot be too carefully nurtured.

A Story of Lincoln's Assassination.

There reposes in the trunk of William Withers, Jr., leader of the California theater orchestra, San Francisco, an ancient swallow-tail coat, faded somewhat with time, fragmentary in condition through the clipping of pieces from it as mementoes, yet withal a highly interesting garment through historical association. The coat has two long knife cuts in it, one in the neck and the other near the hip, which were received in Ford's theater at Washington, where the coat, with Mr. Withers inside of it, was present on the night that President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. The gashes were inflicted by the assassin, John Wilkes Booth, a few moments after he had fired the shot that reverberated through a nation, and the story of that night, as told by Mr. Withers, is as follows:

The play, as you will recollect, was "Our American Cousin." The house was jammed from pit to dome with a throng whose admiration and attention were divided between the Presidential box, where sat Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, Little Tad and Major Rathbone, and the stage, where Harry Hawk and Laura Keene personated the leading roles. The first two acts had proceeded without unusual interest, President Lincoln appearing to quietly enjoy the performance, and finally the curtain rose on the third act and the dairy scene, where Trenchard was to propose to Mag Meredith. During the interlude I had gone behind to talk with Wright, the prompter. I had composed a song called "Honor to Our Soldiers," in honor of the occasion, which had not been sung at the proper time, and went to see about it. To talk with him where he stood I had to order Spangler, the scene-shifter, out of the way.

I had finished my talk with Wright, and turned down the passage which led into the alley where Peanut John was holding Booth's horse, and which also led to the door by which I returned to my place in the orchestra. The passage was dark and very narrow, so much so in fact that two men could not pass side by side. I had traversed nearly to the door when I heard a single pistol shot. I stopped, started, and trying to think where there was a pistol fired in the "American Cousin." Then I heard a strange murmur, and looking round I saw Harry Hawk rapidly running up the steps that led to his dressing room. A second afterward I saw a man running across the stage. He had jumped from the box to the stage, on the other side from me, but his impetus was so great that he ran into a brick wall near me and the entrance to the passage, putting out his hands to break the force of the collision. Then he jumped for the passageway, and I saw his face, but scarcely recognized Booth. His eyes seemed starting from his head, his black hair stood on end, and his dark, handsome face wore such a ferocious expression that he did not seem like the same man.

I was completely paralyzed as he rushed into the passage and said "Get out of my way." I could not have done so, even if I had had my presence of mind, and in a second he was on me with a dagger he held in his right hand. The blow struck me, glancing on the hip, and made the cut you see there. It turned me partly round, and like a flash struck me and knocked me headlong to the floor of the passage in front of him. Without losing a second he jumped over me, seized the knob and wrenched the door open, and in a second more was galloping at top speed down the street.

All this took place in far less time than it takes to tell it. After him, also, jumping over me, came Stuart, the detective, and following him a crowd of people, who, taking me for an accomplice, arrested me and took me back to the stage. The scene there was perfectly indescribable. The audience, crazy with excitement, were yelling they knew not what. The stage and the front part of the auditorium were jammed with people, some asking the cause and others crying "Lynch him," "Hang him," though who the assassin was they did not know. The lights were in full glow, and above all could be seen the President, senseless and white as death, with his head partially hanging out of the box, while Mrs. Lincoln bathed his forehead with water from a basinful which Laura Keene held. The audience became even wilder when the truth was known, and were augmented by the throng of breathless arrivals from the outside, until the theater was so crowded that another person could not possibly have got even his head in. The President lay in his box under the doctor's care for a long time, and was finally removed, through the greatest crowd that ever gathered in Washington, to the boarding-house across the street, where he died the next morning. I was taken to the police station, but discharged as soon as the facts were known. Spangler was arrested and convicted of being an accomplice, but was afterward pardoned. The knife thrusts did me no great injury, the first not penetrating the skin and the second only scratching my neck. I have kept the coat, however, as a memento of the most exciting night I ever experienced. The shirt which I wore, which was also slashed, I gave to Harry Widmer, now of the Baldwin, who was playing with me at the time, and who still has it, I believe.

Little Duties.

A letter-carrier in one of our large cities, a few months ago, found on reaching the postoffice, after a long round of delivery, a letter in his bag that he had overlooked. It would have taken him half an hour to return and deliver it. He was very tired and hungry. The looking missive. He thrust it into his pocket and delivered it on his first round next day. What consequences followed? For want of that letter a great firm had failed to meet their engagements; their notes had gone to protest; a mill closed, and hundreds of poor workmen were thrown out of employment. The letter-carrier himself was discharged for his neglect. His family suffered during the winter for many of the necessaries of life, but his loss was of small account compared with the enormous amount of misery caused by his single failure in duty.

Another case—a mechanic who had been out of work a long time in New York went last September to collect a small sum due to him. The gentleman who owed it, being annoyed at some trifle, irritably refused the money. The man went to his wretched home, and maddened by the sight of his hungry wife and children, went out to the backyard and hanged himself. The next day an old employer sent to offer him a permanent situation. Here was a life lost and a family left paupers because a bill of a dollar or two was not paid at the right time.

The old Spanish proverb says: "There is no such thing as a trifle in the world." When we think how inextricably the lives of all mankind are tangled together, it seems as if every word or action moved a lever which set in motion a gigantic machinery, whose effect is wholly beyond our control. For this reason, if for no other, let us be careful to perform promptly and well the duties of life—even the most trivial.—Youth's Companion.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Eastern and Middle States.

George Jones, universally known as "Count Joannes," a peculiar old man familiar to all New Yorkers, died in the metropolis a few days ago, aged sixty-nine years. He had been an actor in early life, but for the last twelve years had practiced law, without, however, obtaining any clients. Some months ago he gave a series of theatrical performances in New York, playing in Shakespearean parts to large audiences of men, who attended merely to amuse themselves at his expense by continuously applauding his acting, of which he was very proud. At most of the performances the noise made by the audiences was so great that the actors could not be heard, and occasionally the police had to interfere. The "Count Joannes" was continually writing letters to the New York papers—letters that were self-laudatory of the writer or descriptive of some incident in which he had cut a prominent figure. His title to nobility existed only in his imagination, and his eccentricities and inordinate vanity were doubtless the result of a diseased mind.

Many prominent citizens from all parts of New York were present at Governor Cornell's inauguration in the Capitol at Albany. Governor Robinson made a speech of welcome, to which Governor Cornell replied. The governors then marched arm in arm to the Governor's Room, where Mr. Cornell held a reception.

The estimated sum needed to carry on the New York city government during 1880 is $28,142,991.98.

Charles Stewart Parnell, the great Irish agitator and leader of the Home Rulers in the British parliament, arrived in New York the other day in an ocean steamer. He was accompanied by John Dillon, another prominent agitator, and the two were received with an address of welcome, read by a representative of their fellow countrymen in New York. The visitors replied, and were then escorted to their hotel by the committee. Mr. Parnell stated to a reporter that he came to America in an official capacity as president of the Irish National Land League—best fitted for the purpose of assisting the destitute in Ireland on account of its thorough organization—and that he should visit all the principal cities of the United States, for the purpose of waking public opinion in this country, and creating a moral force here, in behalf of his efforts to reform the system under which the Irish tenantry hold their land—a system to which, Mr. Parnell claims, is due the wretched condition of Ireland to-day.

The Grocers' bank, of New York city, has suspended and a receiver been appointed. Forgeries to a large amount in securities held by the bank have been discovered.

About 8,000 people were present at the first public meeting held in New York by Messrs. Parnell and Dillon, the Irish agitators. Mr. Parnell described the distress now prevalent in Ireland, declaring it to be the result in great part of the evils of the land system and the exaction of the landlords. He was followed by Mr. Dillon, who referred to the time of trouble through which Ireland passed in 1847, and arraigned the British government for allowing such a state of things as now exists to continue without endeavoring to ameliorate it.

Bishop Gilbert Haven, of the Methodist Episcopal church, died in Malden, Mass., a few days ago, aged fifty-nine years. He had been for some years editor of Zion's Herald, the leading Methodist organ of New England, and was one of the best known members of the church in the United States.

At a little before six o'clock in the morning flames were discovered issuing from the Turn Halle, on East Fourth street, New York. Sixteen persons—the lessee of the building, janitor, servants and others—were asleep in the upper story of the building, from which there was no mode of exit to the roof; and as the flames swept up the one broad stairway that led to the street the inmates were cut off from escape in every direction. Henry Gehweiler, Theresa Ehrhardt and a servant girl named Rosa jumped or fell to the ground from the fourth story; the first two were instantly killed, and the third died in the hospital. Willie Geib, aged ten, and Louis Schmitt, aged thirty, were suffocated, and several other men and women were injured more or less severely.

By an explosion in a celluloid factory in Newark, N. J., William Finders, Frederick tites, Horace O. Pierce and Charles Yates were instantly killed; Spencer M. Atwood died from the effects of injuries received in jumping through a window, and several other workmen were badly hurt.

S. V. White, receiver of the suspended Grocers' Bank, of New York, has caused the arrest of J. Lloyd Haigh, a wire manufacturer and principal debtor to the institution, for forgeries committed upon it to the probable extent of $125,000.

United States Senator George S. Houston, of Alabama, died at his home in Athens, Ala., a few days ago, aged sixty-eight years. Senator Houston was a native of Tennessee. In early life he removed to Alabama, from which State he served as a Congressman, with a single break, from 1841 to 1861. He was governor of Alabama from 1874 to 1879. Last year he was appointed a United States Senator, to serve until 1885.

Senator Cameron, chairman of the national Republican committee, has issued the following call: A national convention of the Republican party will meet at Chicago on Wednesday, the second day of June next, at twelve o'clock noon, for the nomination of candidates to be supported for President and Vice-President at the next election. Republicans, and all who will co-operate with them in supporting the nominees of the party, are invited to choose two delegates from each congressional district, four at large from each State, two from each territory, and two from the District of Columbia, to represent them in the convention.

The reception at the White House on New Years' day was largely attended by members of the diplomatic corps, army and navy officers and others. During the reception Colonel De Ahna, ex-collector of customs for Sitka, Alaska, approached the President and denounced him as a despot, saying: "For eighteen months you have denied me justice." While the colonel was talking the police pushed him into another room and the reception went on.

Foreign News.

As the lately married king and queen of Spain were driving through the gate of the royal palace in Madrid, a few evenings ago, a young man fired two shots from a revolver at the monarch, but his aim was bad and nobody was hurt. The second shot fired passed quite close to the young queen's face. The would-be assassin was arrested at once. He gave his name as Gonzales, his age as nineteen and occupation that of a waiter. Three other persons were arrested, charged with being accomplices.

M. de Lesseps, projector of the Darien canal, has arrived in Panama. Upon his arrival the governor of the State of Panama proclaimed a three days' holiday, and there was a grand parade and a bull fight. M. de Lesseps says he will begin work on the canal in about six months, and that he is quite sure of the money necessary to complete the work.

Dispatches from Connemara, Ireland, state that while a number of bailiffs were proceeding with the work of serving ejectment papers upon several tenants of the district, under the protection of a detachment of constabulary, a large company of tenantry assembled and finally attacked the bailiffs, after giving them notice of their purpose to do so unless they ceased attempting to serve the papers. The bailiffs called for help upon the constabulary, who at first fired upon the people and then charged upon them with fixed bayonets, wounding a large number, some of them, it is believed, fatally. The crowd retreated, but continued throwing missiles and firing scattering shots at the constabulary from behind casual defenses by the hedges. Great excitement prevailed throughout the district, and further disturbances were feared.

The survey for De Lesseps' canal across the Isthmus of Panama has been commenced. Only one American engineer will be employed on it. The press of Panama is quite defiant in tone toward the United States. The Panama Star and Herald, in an article on the action of the United States Congress concerning the canal, says that there are only two things to be considered in connection with the enterprise—the money to build the canal and the local consent of the government of New Grenada, and that the assumption of the United States is arrogant and outrageous. Meanwhile it is said that General Grant has expressed his warmest sympathies with the movement looking toward the building of a canal across Nicaragua—the route favored by Americans.

A Word to Workers.

If your avocations are mentally or physically laborious, if they subject you to exposure in inclement weather, if they confine you to the desk and are of a nature to involve wear and tear of brain and nervous strain, you may occasionally require some renovating tonic. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the article for you, it stimulates the failing energies, invigorates the body and cheers the mind. It enables the system to throw off the debilitating effects of undue fatigue, gives renewed vigor to the organs of digestion, arouses the liver when inactive, which it very often is with people whose pursuits are sedentary, renews the jaded appetite, and encourages healthful repose. Its ingredients are safe, and its credentials, which consist in the hearty endorsement of persons of every class of society, are most convincing. Admirably is it adapted to the medical wants of workers.

A Funny Mistake.

The other day an old country woman drove up in her wagon to a well-known shoe store, and entering the same, thus accosted the urbane proprietor: "I want to see them 'ere 'Ninety-five' Rubber Boots advertised in all the papers. I'm thinking they must be cheap at ninety-five cents, and I'll just take home two pair to the old man."

It was difficult at first to convince the old lady that the figures "95" referred to quality, not price, and that the boots were 95 per cent. sterling pure; but when she was shown a sample cut open to display the interior, and saw that the soles were half an inch thick of solid rubber, and that the upper and legs were double thick, she was contented to pay, not ninety-five cents, but several dollars, for a single pair of the "Candee 95 Per Cent. Boots," believing they would be the cheapest in the end for the "old man." The storekeeper punched the date of sale in the legs so as to fix the expiration of the three months' warrant, and assured her in case they did not stand the warrant, he would give a new pair free of charge.

There is nothing to cleanse an impure circulation or wake up a dormant liver like Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup. It does the business thoroughly in either case, promoting active bilious secretion, restoring to the life current the purity of perfect health and removing from the cuticle disfiguring eruptions and sores. Chronic rheumatism and gout also succumb to its curative influence. For the diseases peculiar to the gentler sex it is a capital remedy. All druggists sell it.
